WADE HAMPTON'S PLATFORM.

We print this morning Wade Hampton's speech in Charleston, upon his return from New York. It should be read by all who wish to know the consequences of electing Seymour and Blair. It was Hampton's first speech in Charleston since the war, since the time when the people of Charleston, by firing on the flag of the United States, "did their duty as Carolinians." The rebel General reminded his hearers that while they were holding Charleston in spite of, defying, the National authority, he was at the head of a force engaged elsewhere, his heart like their hearts being equally cheered by the intelligence that he still still retained the confidence of his men, and was "unconquered and unconquerable." At last, said Mr. Hampton, South Carolina, whose "honor" has never been tarnished, was humiliated by having her soil pressed by Sherman's foot! And he then proceeded to surrender to the Northern carpet-baggers and their allies, the rebel General Sherman. But, humiliating as was this record, it was no fault of the Carolinian, who had ALWAYS done their duty, and would forever "teach their children to lay the memory of Sumter "regard," the blame for the consequences of persisting at the North by hanging all Union prisoners.

Having thus, in the true rebel manner, Wade Hampton announced that he thought the day of Southern ascendancy now at hand. In admitting that he had been at the New York Convention, he thought it necessary to add that he yielded to no one in devotion to the cause of which the President and the United States Army upon their side, thought, and who have no stake in the property of the country, should not merely peace, the condition of prosperity, need surprise nobody. But that a farmer, a laborer, a mechanic, a merchant, a man of affairs, should foist in the elevation to power of those who have sworn to disturb the quiet, upset the institutions of which the prosperity depends, that the miseries of the distress and suffering and derangement of business caused by a four years' rebellion should be effaced from any sensible mind; that, with Blair's letter and his Sulzbacher "Jacob" speech before him, on the one hand, and the letter of General Grant, and such speeches as those of Colfax and Morton before him, on the other hand, any man of intelligence, who loves his country or who desires peace, should fail to put forth his whole strength in supporting the Republican ticket and in opposition to the Copperhead ticket, is a marvel.

"LET US PAUSE PEACE."

This ridiculous sentence, containing the pith of General Grant's letter accepting the nomination for the Presidency, is the watchword of the campaign. Schuyler Colfax has referred to it as such in the speeches delivered in the thousands of patriots who have thronged to greet him at every station from Washington to South Bend. Republican journals have echoed it as expressing the desire of the nation. Frank Blair has given it additional point by his declarations in favor of a renewal of civil war, which Wise, Toombs, Vance, Howell Cobb, and every other unrepentant rebel in the South have heartily endorsed. Wade Hampton committed the Democracy to the war party. Bringing into the platform the declaration that the laws of Congress are revolutionary, unconstitutional and illegal, he had the veteran "carpet-bagger," General Sherman. But, humiliating as was this record, it was no fault of the Carolinian, who had ALWAYS done their duty, and would forever "teach their children to lay the memory of Sumter "regard," the blame for the consequences of persisting at the North by hanging all Union prisoners.

Having thus, in the true rebel manner, Wade Hampton announced that he thought the day of Southern ascendancy now at hand. In admitting that he had been at the New York Convention, he thought it necessary to add that he yielded to no one in devotion to the cause of which the President and the United States Army upon their side, thought, and who have no stake in the property of the country, should not merely peace, the condition of prosperity, need surprise nobody. But that a farmer, a laborer, a mechanic, a merchant, a man of affairs, should foist in the elevation to power of those who have sworn to disturb the quiet, upset the institutions of which the prosperity depends, that the miseries of the distress and suffering and derangement of business caused by a four years' rebellion should be effaced from any sensible mind; that, with Blair's letter and his Sulzbacher "Jacob" speech before him, on the one hand, and the letter of General Grant, and such speeches as those of Colfax and Morton before him, on the other hand, any man of intelligence, who loves his country or who desires peace, should fail to put forth his whole strength in supporting the Republican ticket and in opposition to the Copperhead ticket, is a marvel.

SEYMOUR MORTON'S SPEECH.

The speech of Senator Morton, at Indianapolis, on Wednesday night, was one of the most stirring and effective addresses upon the issue of the campaign yet delivered. He handles the Democratic platform and the Democratic ticket with the rod of a dissecting knowledge of a demonstrator of anatomy engaged in dissecting and explaining the constitutional and other infirmities of the subject before him. The effects of hereditary rebellion and chronic disease are clearly pointed out the dislocated and twingling joints, while the terrible results of excesses and bad passions are traced in all parts and portions of the system. Not a defect in the subject before them escapes the keen eye of the lecturer. Let us have peace, spoke the heads of his hearers, but of the jaws of thousands who will read his speech.

Senator Morton demonstrated that Frank Blair's letters are the vital point of the Democratic platform, and that they mean a renewal of civil war. The success of the Democratic party means the overthrow of the Southern Republican governments, the overthrow of the Reconstruction laws, the repeal of the Reconstruction amendments, the repudiation of the National debt, the payment of the rebel debt, the payment of the rebel claims, the payment of the rebel pensions, the payment of the rebel soldiers, the payment of the rebel officers, the payment of the rebel slaves, the payment of the rebel cause, the payment of the rebel war, the payment of the rebel dead, the payment of the rebel living

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 31.

APPEAL AT THE AMERICAN MINISTER'S OFFICE.—Mr. Cooper, who has been acting as the President's minister, is now in Paris, and will probably remain there for some time. Mr. Johnson does not contemplate any immediate return. His departure, however, may be sudden. It may be called for at any moment by Mr. Seward, or Mr. Evarts—both now the President's ear and listed—and induce him to appoint Cooper Minister. The President's Cabinet is reported that either would make a good and ably, and stubbornly endorsed by the President. The President's friends are trying to bear to their action, and also in the mass of Congress. It is rumored in Union House circles that a movement has been started against the reappointment of Sheridan.

Gen. Sherman passed through town, on his way North, on what leave, to-day. He thinks there will be no disturbance of the peace of Texas. Gen. Sheridan is present in Virginia, with the Congressional Committee at Richmond are preparing to have an objection to the Governor of Texas, under the laws of the State, which provide that the three Stockholders in a district may arrange for the election of the Governor, which he did on the occasion mentioned.

Several Southern Congressmen have introduced in their Legislatures, now in session, that the passage of a law providing for electing Senators by the Legislatures would meet the approval of their constituents.

BAGDAD BLOCKADE.

It will be remembered that Butler, just before the Power adjourned on Monday, obtained leave to print the evidence he had prepared to reply to Senator Henderson's explanation concerning Butler's report. These remarks appear in the Congressional Record of Tuesday, under the head "Wonderful." The Senate will be sure to take notice of such a violation of privilege.

TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—The Department of Agriculture has issued a report on the condition of the crops in July.

It is the most remarkable fact in connection with the corn crop of the present year is the great increase in the area of land devoted to the cereal. The increase is 1,000,000 acres, or 5 per cent. The increase in the number of acres between the present year and 1869 is 1,000,000 acres, or 5 per cent. The increase in the number of acres between the present year and 1870 is 1,000,000 acres, or 5 per cent. The increase in the number of acres between the present year and 1871 is 1,000,000 acres, or 5 per cent. The increase in the number of acres between the present year and
